NEW Pittsburgh Courier

Established in 1907 by Edwin Harleston, a guard in an H. J. Heinz food-packing plant, the Pittsburgh Courier gained national prominence after attorney Robert Lee Vann became the newspaper's editor and publisher, treasurer, and legal counsel in 1910. In his lifetime, Vann saw the Courier grow to become the largest, most influential Black newspaper in the nation with a circulation of 250,000 and over 400 employees in 14 cities.

From its inception, The Pittsburgh Courier sought to empower African Americans economically and politically. It called for improvements in housing, health, and education; protested the slum conditions in which black people were forced to live in Pittsburgh and throughout the nation; and encouraged the Black community to support Black organizations such as the National Urban League and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The Pittsburgh Courier was the first Black newspaper to publish both national and local editions. At one time, there were as many as 14 editions circulated in cities and states from coast to coast including Illinois (Chicago Edition), Michigan (Detroit Edition), Far West (Los Angeles), Pacific Coast, Southern (Miami), Texas, Georgia, Louisiana, Pennsylvania (Pittsburgh and Philadelphia Editions), Midwest, Missouri (St. Louis), Ohio, New York and Washington, DC. Many of the 20th century's well-known and influential Black journalists and intellectuals contributed to the paper, such as George Schuyler, Marcus Garvey, W.E.B. Du Bois, James Weldon Johnson, Elijah Muhammed, and Zora Neale Hurston. It was also one of the few Black newspapers to provide coverage of news in Africa as the countries on the continent moved toward independence. The paper, which was often known simply as The Courier, protested misrepresentations of African Americans in the media and in sports.

The Courier was acquired in 1966 by John H. Sengstacke and reorganized as the New Pittsburgh Courier; thus becoming part of Sengstacke Newspapers (now Real Times LLC) – the largest and most influential Black newspaper chain in the country – which also includes the Chicago Daily Defender, Michigan Chronicle, Michigan Front Page and (Memphis) Tri-State Defender.

Today, the New Pittsburgh Courier is leaner, more sophisticated, more localized in its thrust. But it still offers an authoritative, responsible voice to Black audiences in one of the fastest growing consumer markets in the country.

Each week, the New Pittsburgh Courier brings that message home to its ever expanding readership throughout western Pennsylvania, and globally on the world wide web—a readership that sees in us that common vehicle for expression; a trusted source of information, news and current history; and a respected platform for open discussion and debate on issues that are both timely and relevant...not only for Black society, but for all of society.
